

Jupiter's Great Red Spot is shrinking. The storm has been raging for at least 400 years, but it's been shrinking over the past few decades and is now only about 1.3 times the size of Earth.